The White Mountains National Recreation Area

Just an hour's drive from Fairbanks, the White Mountains National Recreation Area is one of Interior Alaska's premier winter destinations! The recreation area was created to provide for public outdoor recreation and enjoyment and for the protection of scenic, scientific, historic, fish and wildlife, and other values contributing to public enjoyment.

The area offers stunning scenery and peaceful solitude. Visitors can travel by ski, snowshoe, dog team and snowmobile to enjoy the 12 public cabins and 250 miles of groomed trails.

Public Recreation Cabins

Cabins must be reserved in advance and require a fee. Reservations for reservation days are limited to three consecutive nights, with reservations beginning at noon of the first day's stay to noon of the last day. Reservations may be made up to 30 days in advance. Weekends and holidays are times of peak use.

Wolf Run Cabin

Reservations for the cabins can be made through the recreation.gov website under "White Mountains National Recreation Area, Alaska" or by calling toll free: 1-877-444-6777.

Cabins are equipped with bunk beds, a table and benches, propane cook stove, propane lantern, fire extinguisher, saw, ax, broom, wood stove and outhouse.

Renters need to bring their own food, water, sleeping bags and pads, matches, utensils, toilet paper, garbage bags, and 1-pound propane bottles for the cook stove and lantern. Renters should also bring a shovel and spare lantern in case the lantern don't function properly. Cabin users should be prepared to cut firewood or bring some with them.

Trail Shelters

Four trail shelters are available throughout the White Mountains and Steese Areas. Trail shelters are available on a first-come, first-served basis, no reservations can be made.

The Summit Trail Shelter and Wickersham Trail Shelter are in the White Mountains. Only the Wickersham trail shelter has a wood stove.

The Ptarmigan Creek and North Fork Shelters are located along the non-motorized Pinnell Mountain Trail in the Steese Area.

The Steese National Conservation Area

The Steese was created to conserve and protect nationally significant landscapes with unrivaled scenic, geological, and ecological values.

With no winter maintenance, the area offers solitude and opportunities for winter recreation such as cross-country skiing and snowmobile. Routes are sometimes maintained by caribou hunters and a few trappers. The trail for the Yukon Quest is marked and maintained for the dog-sled race that occurs in February.

Safety Recommendations

Trail conditions and weather can change rapidly and there are many risks associated with winter recreation. Be as prepared as possible:

-Share a trip plan with family or friends before you head out.

-Check the weather before you head out.

-Check highway conditions before you head out (511.alaska.gov).

-Bring more water, food, and fuel than you need for your trip.

-Bring a satellite communication device, more than one if possible.
Do not rely on cell phone coverage in these areas!

-Plan for mechanical breakdowns.

-If you become stranded, do not separate from your party.
